ARBOR DAY IN SPAIN.

A Custom That Was Copied From Our Tree Planting Festival.

You are prone to think, since America is the youngest of all the nations, that all our customs are derived from some older people, in whose national life a part of our population had its source. Did you ever hear of an old European country adopting a custom that originated in the United States? When you read of the Fiesta del Arbol in Madrid you are more than likely to assume that it was the tree planting day that gave a suggestion for our annual Arbor day.

Would you be astonished to learn that the Arbol fiesta was patterned directly after our American festival or holiday, when trees are planted by the children of the public schools? That it was copied after our custom is not difficult to establish, for the first festival of this kind was held in Madrid in 1896, having been inaugurated by the young king and his mother. At that time we had been celebrating Arbor day in the United States for more than twelve years.

In that country the event has come to be of real significance, since it is national, whereas in our country it is under the direction of the individual states. Every year the school children are not only commanded to plant young trees, but they are taken to inspect the planting of previous years and are impressed by their teachers with the importance of conserving the forests of their native land. In his first Fiesta del Arbol address King Alfonso announced that the idea was borrowed from the United States, and it was regarded as of so much value that not even the rumor of the Spanish-American war sufficed to interfere with its observance.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Small William—Father, kindly convey to my mind the meaning of the word "hobo." Paternal Ancestor—That is the consuetudinary designation of an indigent traveler, my son.—Judge.

STAGE SALARIES NOT HIGH

Annual Income of Good Japanese Actor Estimated at $7,500, Out of Which He Pays for Costumes.

According to the author of an interesting work on the Japanese stage the profession of an actor in Japan is not considered a high one. "When a play is staged," he writes, "it runs at least 23 consecutive days. For such a term a first-class man would earn about $1,250 and his annual income may be estimated at $7,500. But it must not be forgotten that out of this sum he must provide his own costumes, which are very expensive.

"The curtain does not rise, as in Europe and America, but is pulled sideways and one can easily see the attendants who are intrusted with this work. The orchestra is hidden behind the scenery, while in a sort of proscenium box the reciter sits concealed behind a curtain of thin bamboo. There is no applause by clapping hands as in our theaters, but the public stimulates the actors by exclamation, in a way that may be compared to the encouraging and cheering of the dancers in Spain. From the greenroom a bridge leads to the platform. This bridge is called 'flow-ers'. The greenroom is closed by a drapery, which the actors must lift for themselves. When the performers have some importance and reputation they have an attendant for the purpose of lifting this drapery. But the first actors have the title taya, which confers the right to two assistants to hold up the curtain of the greenroom for their entries and exits."

Overheard in 2000 A. D.

"Now, this is the skeleton of a man who lived in the twentieth century." "Why is one arm so much longer than the other, professor?" "This is not an unusual case. You will notice that the right arm is several inches longer than the left and is due to the custom quite common in those days of clinging to a strap with the right hand while holding a newspaper in the left hand."

Yea, Verily!

"Champagne," remarked Colonel Mixem, "is less intoxicating than beer." "How do you figure that out?" queried his friend Jaggsmit. "Because fewer people can afford to drink it," replied the colonel, as he proceeded to erase the foam from his mustache.
